

NEW-YORK-DAY-BY-DAY O-O-MINTYRE.

Special Correspondent of The Washington Ferald.

New York, Jan. 14.—When George Randolph Chester migrated from a little town in Indiana to write pieces for the Cincinnati Enquirer, he was given as his first assignment the covering of the hotels—to write the gossip of the hotels—to write the gossip of the lobbies.

Armed with seven pencils and a giltedged leather note book, the gift of friends when he departed on his journalistic career, Chester began the rounds of the hotels. At the old Emery Hotel s banquet was in progress, and Chester was instructed by the clerk to go up to the banquet hall He did.

About midnight he called up his office and reported that all was quiet in the hotels. "How about that banquet at the Emery?" he was asked.

"Oh, shucks, there wasn't any news"

Cret sorrow. He wasn't able to sell a certain song that he had recently written.

The National Press Club gave a minstrel recently and the song was the hit of the performance. He had clippings buiging from every pocket and marched into a big publishing house on Broadway.

"There," he said, throwing a bale of clippings on the desk of E. F. Bitner, the manager was to to dipping so the desk of E. F. Bitner, the manager took one look at Acton, saw the determination in his face and excused himself for the moment. He had clippings to the desk of E. F. "Oh, shucks, there wasn't any news to it at all. They didn't even get around to the speechmaking. The toastmaster in lighting a cigar set his callulated collar on the second control of elluloid collar on fire and everybody

"All right, come on in," said the tired voice of the city editor. "Your next assignment is to be quite an important one. I'm going to send you home to have you find out how they come to turn you loose."

A long-haired young man approach-ed the postal window in the Times Square Station and diffidently shoved a role of paper through to the stamp "What is it?" demanded the latter.

Howard Acton was in town from Washington this week bubbling over with enthusiasm and with a weird light of expectancy in his eye. Acton for some time has been nursing a se-body's head.

Grace Valentine, the dancer, called up an apartment house the other night and a negro bellboy answered. Her party was not in and the boy asked if she wanted to leave a name. "Just say Miss Valentine called," she renlied.

"Miss Ballentine, you say?"

"Miss Ballentine, you say?"
"No, Valentine!"
"Do n't git you!"
"Do you know what day is celebrated on February 14?"
"Oh, sholy," was the reply. "Washington's Birthday. All right, Miss Washington."

A Disturbing Element.

She encouraged a lot of the girls to gather in her dressing room and start little card games instead of tending strictly to her work. She came late in the mornings and would resent being told to return in the evenings. Then she was always seen in the company of the actors around the studio, laughing boisterously and encouraging their little attentions, which pleased and flattered her.

I am sorry I did not get the letter from Dorothy M., of time to advise her what costume to wear in a Japanese play, but there are often unavoidable delays in the mail. The best way to get any costume is to go to the library and in the histories of different countries you will find illustrations. Costumes pleased and flattered her.
